

What Can Landscapers Do in Winter?

Table Of Contents

- Patios
- Retaining walls
- Hardscaping
- Water Features

(214) 728-8894

What Can Landscapers Do in Winter?

The winter months are often slow for landscaping projects. When your gardens and lawns are frozen or just plain too cold, everything tends to dry up. This does not imply that you should close up shop as soon as the first winter weather announces itself.

So what can people do with all the weather challenges in the winter? Read on to find out how you can beautify your property, even in the cold months!

Patios

Usually, people want their patio to be built in winter, so that it will be fully complete and ready to use in spring. Building a patio in winter will not harm your turf, plants, or irrigation system.

Plants and turgrass should be mostly dormant and you won't be using your irrigation system much in winter, which makes it an ideal time to break ground. Many people pause their lawn mowing or other lawn care services through the winter, which gives landscaping companies more time to work on other projects.

Retaining walls

Landscapers can also accommodate customers' retaining wall projects in winter by making them aware of their benefits. By rerouting water away from the home, the installation of a retaining wall during the wintertime enhances yard drainage.

If you have had plants damaged by cold, winter winds in the past, just imagine the protection a retaining wall will offer them. Water runoff from storms, snow, and sleet will be dramatically improved by installing a retaining wall.

Hardscaping

Another job that landscapers can do in winter is hardscaping. Hardscape is any of the non-living elements in landscape design. As the name suggests, these are the harder design elements in a customer's space, like concrete, rocks, bricks, pavers, stone, and wood.

The options are endless for what can be constructed. Garden beds, walkways, incorporating lighting etc. Contact Ryno Lawn Care today to make your landscaping dreams a reality.

Water Features

Water features like ponds and fountains look stunning in cold weather. A landscape garden's look is improved with water features.

Landscapers can build water feature projects in winter. Nowadays, you can even winterize your water features so that they can be enjoyed all year long.